

Part I – Agency Profile

Agency Overview

The Idaho Department of Labor is a leader in generating quality jobs and maintaining an educated, skilled work force that is the foundation of strong communities. The department is committed to ensuring broad access to a wide array of quality employment-related services and economic information. Funding comes primarily from federal formula-based resources and employer taxes. The Wage and Hour Section is supported by state general revenue, and the Commission on Human Rights is transitioning away from general revenue. Only 75 percent of the commission's budget is general revenue in the 2010-2011 fiscal year.

Serving as department director for nearly 16 years, Roger B. Madsen has led the agency to national recognition for its performance and quality service. It received the 2007 Pinnacle Award from the U.S. Department of Labor for running the nation's best unemployment insurance program. The Disability Determinations Service consistently leads the nation in timely and accurate handling of Social Security disability claims. Despite a significant decrease in federal funding over the past several years, the agency's 769 employees stationed in 25 local offices throughout the state and two offices in Boise are determined to help job seekers and businesses meet their needs.

The Governor's Workforce Development Council provides guidance and oversight for the department's work force development programs. The members of this board are appointed by the governor to represent the various regions of the state and the department's broad constituency of business, education, government and labor.

The Commission on Human Rights oversees the operations of the commission staff. Its members are appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the state Senate to represent the diversity of individuals who comprise the population of the state of Idaho.

The Governor's Commission on Service and Volunteerism oversees operations of Serve Idaho. Its members are appointed by the governor to represent the wide range of interests across Idaho.
